Attending lectures

It’s quite a small room because Classics is a bit smaller. I know the Law faculty for example has this big room but Classics is quite small. Um, everyone sits down, they hand out a handout, um, and it depends lecturer to lecturer on what the handout contains, sometimes it’s got almost the whole lecture, um, and you won’t need to make many notes and other times it’s got very few and you need to be making more notes. Um, and that’s also just depends on their preference. Um, and they’re usually about 50 mins, cos they usually start around 5 past and finish around 5 to. Sometimes it’s quite noisy because everyone is typing but you can always hear. Um, and they’re very useful sort of as an introduction to lots of things you wouldn’t know about um and not everyone goes to every lecture but um I remember at the start of term it was full and now it’s definitely nowhere near that amount but I find them very useful and I think that if you’ve got an essay on a topic yes you can go and read about some of the content in the lecture but often it’s nice to get the lecturers opinion and have a basis to go off. Actually it’s why I go to find out people’s opinions and see where that fits in with the reading.
